What can I read to my child?

Babies and very young children can not read yet, so you can read them any book, magazine or newspaper to help them hear and understand the rhythm of the language.

Consider borrowing children's books from a library or resource centre with colourful pictures, repetitive words, and easy-to-understand stories.

How to read with children:

Find books with topics your child likes

Hold the child or bring them close to you while you read together

Show them words and ask them questions about the story and pictures

Remove distractions when reading together

Make reading part of their daily routine
